Conclusions

CNR / ASRT Bilateral Project (2016-2017)

*History of Peace-building:
peaceful relations between
East and West
(11th - 15th Century)*

The project proposes the analysis of the nature, quantity and quality of peaceful relations between Christians and Muslims, from the Iberian Peninsula to the Levant between 11th and 15th century, when the contact with the Other infidel and, in particular, the Muslim one often posed problems of communication and understanding, especially for the diversity of behaviours and cultural and religious codes.

A second aim of the project, no less important than the first, strives for the reflection on the peaceful exchanges between Christians and Muslims not only in academic environments but also outside them, through dissemination activities in schools and the civil society with two purposes: to temper and deny many stereotypes still prevalent on Christian-Muslim relations; to identify moments and places of peaceful coexistence as examples of good practice to consider, especially in light of the current affairs that tend to provide a growing conflict in the relations between Westerners and Muslims, concealing almost the positive examples of coexistence and acceptance.
